

Facts about RSS Feeds

If you want to syndicate your website or your blog then you should have RSS. The way of syndicating websites, online news and weblogs is called RSS feeds or Really Simple Syndication. It is used by major online news sites, community sites and weblogs. Although you might think that it is only applicable for news feeds, Rss feeds are also being used for other information the subscriber may be interested in. For the subscriber, especially those with a lot of interests, the feeds enable him to have access to the latest information from the different site he had subscribed to.

All of the versions fall under either of the two formats although there are many different versions of the RSS feeds. The 0.90 is the first and original format designed by Netscape for different news sites. The next version, the 0.91 was the simplified version of the original version which was very complicated for use. The other format, the RSS 1.0 was designed by non commercial group. All in all, there are seven different formats and all of them are referred to as RSS.

Now, if you are among the individuals who want to have the latest information the moment they are released, then a feed is what you need. You can actually see if your favorite website has added a new content if you have the feed. You can actually get it immediately without needing to visit the site the moment your favorite site published a new content. If you have many interests or have many favorite websites and do not have time to visit them one by one the feed is the most convenient way for you to access the latest in those sites.

To have the right software is the first thing you should do if you want to use feeds. There are many software you can use if you want to read a feed. One example is the news aggregator which is popular among bloggers. This software can help the subscriber, by checking the feeds, keep up with his favorite sites. The software are the same except that some are applications which you have to download while the others are web based or browser based. The next thing you should do then is to decide on what you want to receive. For example you can then subscribe to E or The Insider if you want to receive the latest Hollywood news. You will automatically receive feed from their sites, all you have to do is click on the feed icon in their sites.

About the Author

More references about rss directory, try .

Source: <http://LearnTorre.com>